AN ESSAY BY W. F. PATR.

Speaking from the standpoint of literature or more properly from that of culture, we think that it would be much more difficult to say in what way the writing of this essay would not benefit the reader than to say in what way it would be gained. Among the most important aids of this kind, we would mention the power of investigating a subject in a logical and systematic way, an increase of vocabulary and general knowledge, a limited idea of the whole matter of psychology as well as that of imagination, the improvement in our style of writing, the cultivation of love for literary work, and originality in our work.

Naturally the first thing claiming our attention is the definition of imagination, which Hill defines—other authors giving substantially the same—as the soul's power to recombine representative ideas. From this definition we may see that imagination is a synthetic process, it has no power to originate the elements it uses, and is creative only in the sense that it is bringing into existence new wholes out of the materials supplied by the other faculties of the soul.

The sphere of imagination is much more extensive than that of most of the other powers of the soul, and perhaps the best way to get some idea of it is to compare it with some other. Memory gives us actual things and deals only with the past, while imagination gives us the ideal and deals with the future as well as the past. Perception exhibits the object to us. Imagination conveys the thought, and the perception of the object. Imagination differs from judgment in that the latter deals with the relations of things as actually existing, while imagination concerns ideal objects. Reasoning deals with those truths and facts found in its vicinity, using no new material, but merely expanding and placing together the present elements of the soul, and perhaps the most of no such limitation. Imagination may exist to a high degree where taste is almost wholly wanting, as in the case of some of our poets and painters. Knowledge and imagination do not always exist together, for frequently we find a man who has great learning and very little imagination and the reverse is equally true. A more precise idea of these differences already indicated may be obtained by illustration, and for this purpose we will select an object familiar to all, and examine it from the point of view of imagination. I visited the Art Museum. When I noted the beautiful bowl on which it is located, the size, form, and location of the bowl, the broad steps leading up to the entrance, and when inside the building, the magnificent sculptures, the grand paintings, the armor of ancient soldiers, the excellent display of geological specimens and Indian relics. This was the power of perception. Sitting down at my table I recall the scene in fact, thus exercising the power of recollection. The next morning I read the morning paper. This is the power of memory. As I sit and reflect upon my visit, I begin to estimate the valuable distance of the museum from the heart of the city, its height compared with that of the other buildings in Cincinnati and also with that of the building which now for the first time calls to the judgment. Still continuing in my meditations, I proceed to calculate the number of acres in the grounds and the height of the building in fact, thus exercising the power of reasoning. And now becoming almost buried in my contemplations, I sweep away, in thought, this museum and its grounds, and replace it by another more imposing and grand with grounds infinitely more beautiful. Walks and drives of marbles are scattered over thousands of acres of grounds, which are covered with trees and flowers of every description, interspersed here and there with crystal lakes upon whose silvery surfaces float birds of various kinds. In the center of these grounds stands the Museum itself, covering acres of land and towering high in the heavens. I ascend the steps, enter the building and there is displayed before me in long rows neatly arranged the most wonderful work of man. Sculptures of the Greek Gods, the Sybils, the Muses, the most beautiful paintings, and the modern dress of every description, specimens of all animals, sea or terrestrial, pottery from every nation on earth together with an indescribable display from the other planets. Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and distant Neptune meet my bewildered gaze. Imagination now lies the field to herself, she is untrammelled and uncontrolled. As before noticed, imagination is creative only in a limited sense, and in this respect it has three distinct functions, associative, penetrative, and reconstructive. These we will discuss in their above mentioned order. When we see and examine any material object, we get an idea of it in two different ways, one kind of knowledge existing in a verbal form, as in regard to its weight and dimensions, and another kind existing in a visible form, as its color and shape. Now when we see the material object, our imagination may select any impression received, add other foreign ones to these, arrange and rearrange them until it forms an association, a new whole that will satisfy the person. This power of as-

ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING.

A Gun in the Hands of Mack Barnes Goes Off and Enters Pete Dean's Leg Who Dies from the Effects of It.

Pete Dean, a young man of eighteen years, and a nephew of Mr. Geo. Gregory of this city, was fatally wounded last Saturday evening by the accidental discharge of a shot gun in the hands of Mr. J. M. Barnes, the superintendent of the telegraph line, with headquarters in this city. The facts are about as follows: Some young boys started out on a hunt and stopped in at J. E. Keith & Son's marble shop. Mr. Barnes happened in at the shop along with several others. When the boys came in with the gun he looked at it, taking it in his hand and cocking it, remarking that he thought he would take it out of order. In attempting to raise the hammer the gun went off, the entire load taking effect in Pete Dean's thigh, who was standing just at his left side. In an instant Mr. Dean saw what had happened and he was almost wild.

Drs. Owen, Paynter, Smith and S. Moore were called immediately, and as soon as they saw the young man's condition, they realized that it was bad case. There was only one chance to save his life, and that was to amputate his thigh. This they did very successfully, and it was thought for awhile that the young man's life would be saved, as he seemed to stand the operation very well, and remarked after the operation was over, that he felt very much better since the doctors had taken all the shot out of his leg.

He hadn't yet discovered that his leg was gone. He rested very quietly all night and up to noon Sunday, when he discovered that his leg was gone. The shock was too much for him, and he continued to grow worse from that time, and died in less than an hour. He was fondly loved.

There is no blame attached to Mr. Barnes, as it was purely accidental on his part.

A Voice From the Executive Mansion.
Mr. A. K. HAWKES—Dear Sir: The postscript glosses you furnished me some time since, gave excellent satisfaction. I have tested them by use, and must say they are unequalled in clearness and brilliancy by any that I have ever worn. Respectfully, JOHN B. GORDON, Governor of State of Georgia.

THE STRAUSS FESTIVAL.

At the Auditorium, Louisville, Ky., October 28, 29.

The Strauss Waltz Festival at the Amphitheater Auditorium, Louisville, Ky., Oct. 28, 29, will be attended and enjoyed by a vast crowd of people, not only from the State of Kentucky, but also from the States of Indiana and Tennessee. It will be a rare opportunity to hear Strauss and his famous Court Orchestra, as this is his first and positively his last tour in America. Edmund Strauss has been promoted by the American Press as the Waltz King and the greatest director of Waltz music in the world. On the return visit of Strauss and his orchestra for their farewell, to Chicago at the Auditorium last night.

The program was composed of half a dozen dance numbers, but as an entire it was considerably lengthened by Mr. Strauss' well-known willingness to give extra numbers. What was said of it then is true of it now. In its field, this body is as good as any field in Europe or America. Edmund Strauss' rendition of the class of music which he represents is always up to one's most delicate expectations, and in it one finds something unexpected and novel. Herr Strauss keeps his orchestra with him, and his spirit apparently inspires the whole band. It must be admitted that the program would be so fortunate when working in other fields. Certainly the Vienna leader can afford to be so in this sphere. He maintains complete supremacy in his branch of the art.

Another paper of Chicago of same date says:

"The demand of the Strauss concerts was given last night at the Auditorium to another very large audience and very enthusiastic, quite as much as the first."

Persons wishing to order their seats in advance, can do so by sending P. O. order, or check, to James H. Camp, Business Manager, P. O. Box 63, Louisville, Ky.

ALL WOOL.

When we represent a Suit or pair of Pants to be all wool, you can "bank your money" on the assertion. When we assure you that the goods is fast color, that it was thoroughly steam shrunk before cutting, and that the seams are sewed with silk and not cotton, you can proclaim it to your neighbors as the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. We never misrepresent. Just now the weather is favorable for light and medium-weight Overcoats, and we have a world of such garments in stock, all our own manufacture. We have them at any price from $5 up, in all colors and shapes and sizes. We are selling them fast and as soon as one style begins to run short we manufacture promptly to keep up sizes. In Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits and Pants we are loaded to the guards. See our elegant stock of Boys' and Children's Overcoats; they are beautiful and very moderate in price. 200 Acres of Valuable Land.

My part of the Basin Spring Farm, situated in Breckinridge county, within 30 minutes drive of Irvington, and is directly on the line of the Louisville, Lexington and Nashville Railway, near Bennett's Water Tank. This station is convenient to the land, being only 1/2 of a mile distant, making it accessible for both travel and shipping facilities.

Basin Spring Farm is one of the best farms in the county, and we consider this 200 acres that we own and need offer for sale as the cream of the place. 130 acres cleared land lying in the head of Slaking Creek, and free from all encumbrances. The balance is in timber. Parties desiring a first-class farm situated in the heart of Breckinridge county, and one get a bargain, as I am anxious to sell, being a liberal investor and far below its value. GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC

It is so pleasant to the taste as lemon Syrup.

The smallest infant will take it and never know it is medicine.

Children cry for it. Never fails to cure.

Chills even break up without return.

Cost you only half the price of other Chill Tonics.

No quinine needed. No purgative needed.

Contains no poison. Cheaper than quinine.

It purifies the blood and removes all malarial poisons from the system.

It is as large as any dollar tonic and RETAILS FOR 50 CENTS.
